

Raising Conservative Kids in a Woke City: Teaching Historical, Economic, and Biological Truth in a World of Lies by Stacy Manning and Katy Faust Quotes

Children do best when they are raised in a community that shares their parents' values on fundamental issues. If the teachers at school are constantly, explicitly at odds with the parents' views on a range of crucial topics, it's time for mom and dad to find a better place for their kids to learn—whether this means relocating to a healthier community, joining with other parents to start a new school, or schooling your children at home. – [Yoram Hazony]¹

Wikipedia identifies Woke as an adjective meaning “alert to racial prejudice and discrimination.” If that is what being Woke was limited to, Wokists would be happily at home among conservatives, as we right-wing types don't cotton to injustice and we're all about championing individual rights; further, prejudice and discrimination is about as un-American as it gets. But because like nearly every institution in the United States, Wikipedia has a massive left-wing bias, it failed to wholly capture Woke.²

Conservatives believe that merit should be the sole consideration when assessing a person's potential. We believe it is immoral to afford privilege or deny opportunity because of the color of someone's skin. Conservatives believe true diversity is realized only by a diversity of ideas, and that using skin color as a measure of diversity is pedestrian and insulting. It is racist to deny or select someone for employment or enrollment in higher education based on race, and such policies should be rejected outright, in all forms, in every way.³

But how can you fill them with good information if you don't have the right information yourself? You must become an expert...⁴
